AFTERMATH
THE BOLT CHRONICLES
EARTHQUAKE
ISSUE #1

Muse materializes from shadow-space mid-teleport, his white-glowing eyes locking onto the carnage three hundred feet below—hundreds of civilians walking detonation devices painted in stolen cobalt light. His empathic senses hit like a freight train: pure terror seasoned with manufactured rage.
Someone weaponized your signature, Queen Bolt. They wanted you here specifically. And whoevers pulling these strings?
Theyre not just watching—theyre savoring every second of your horror.
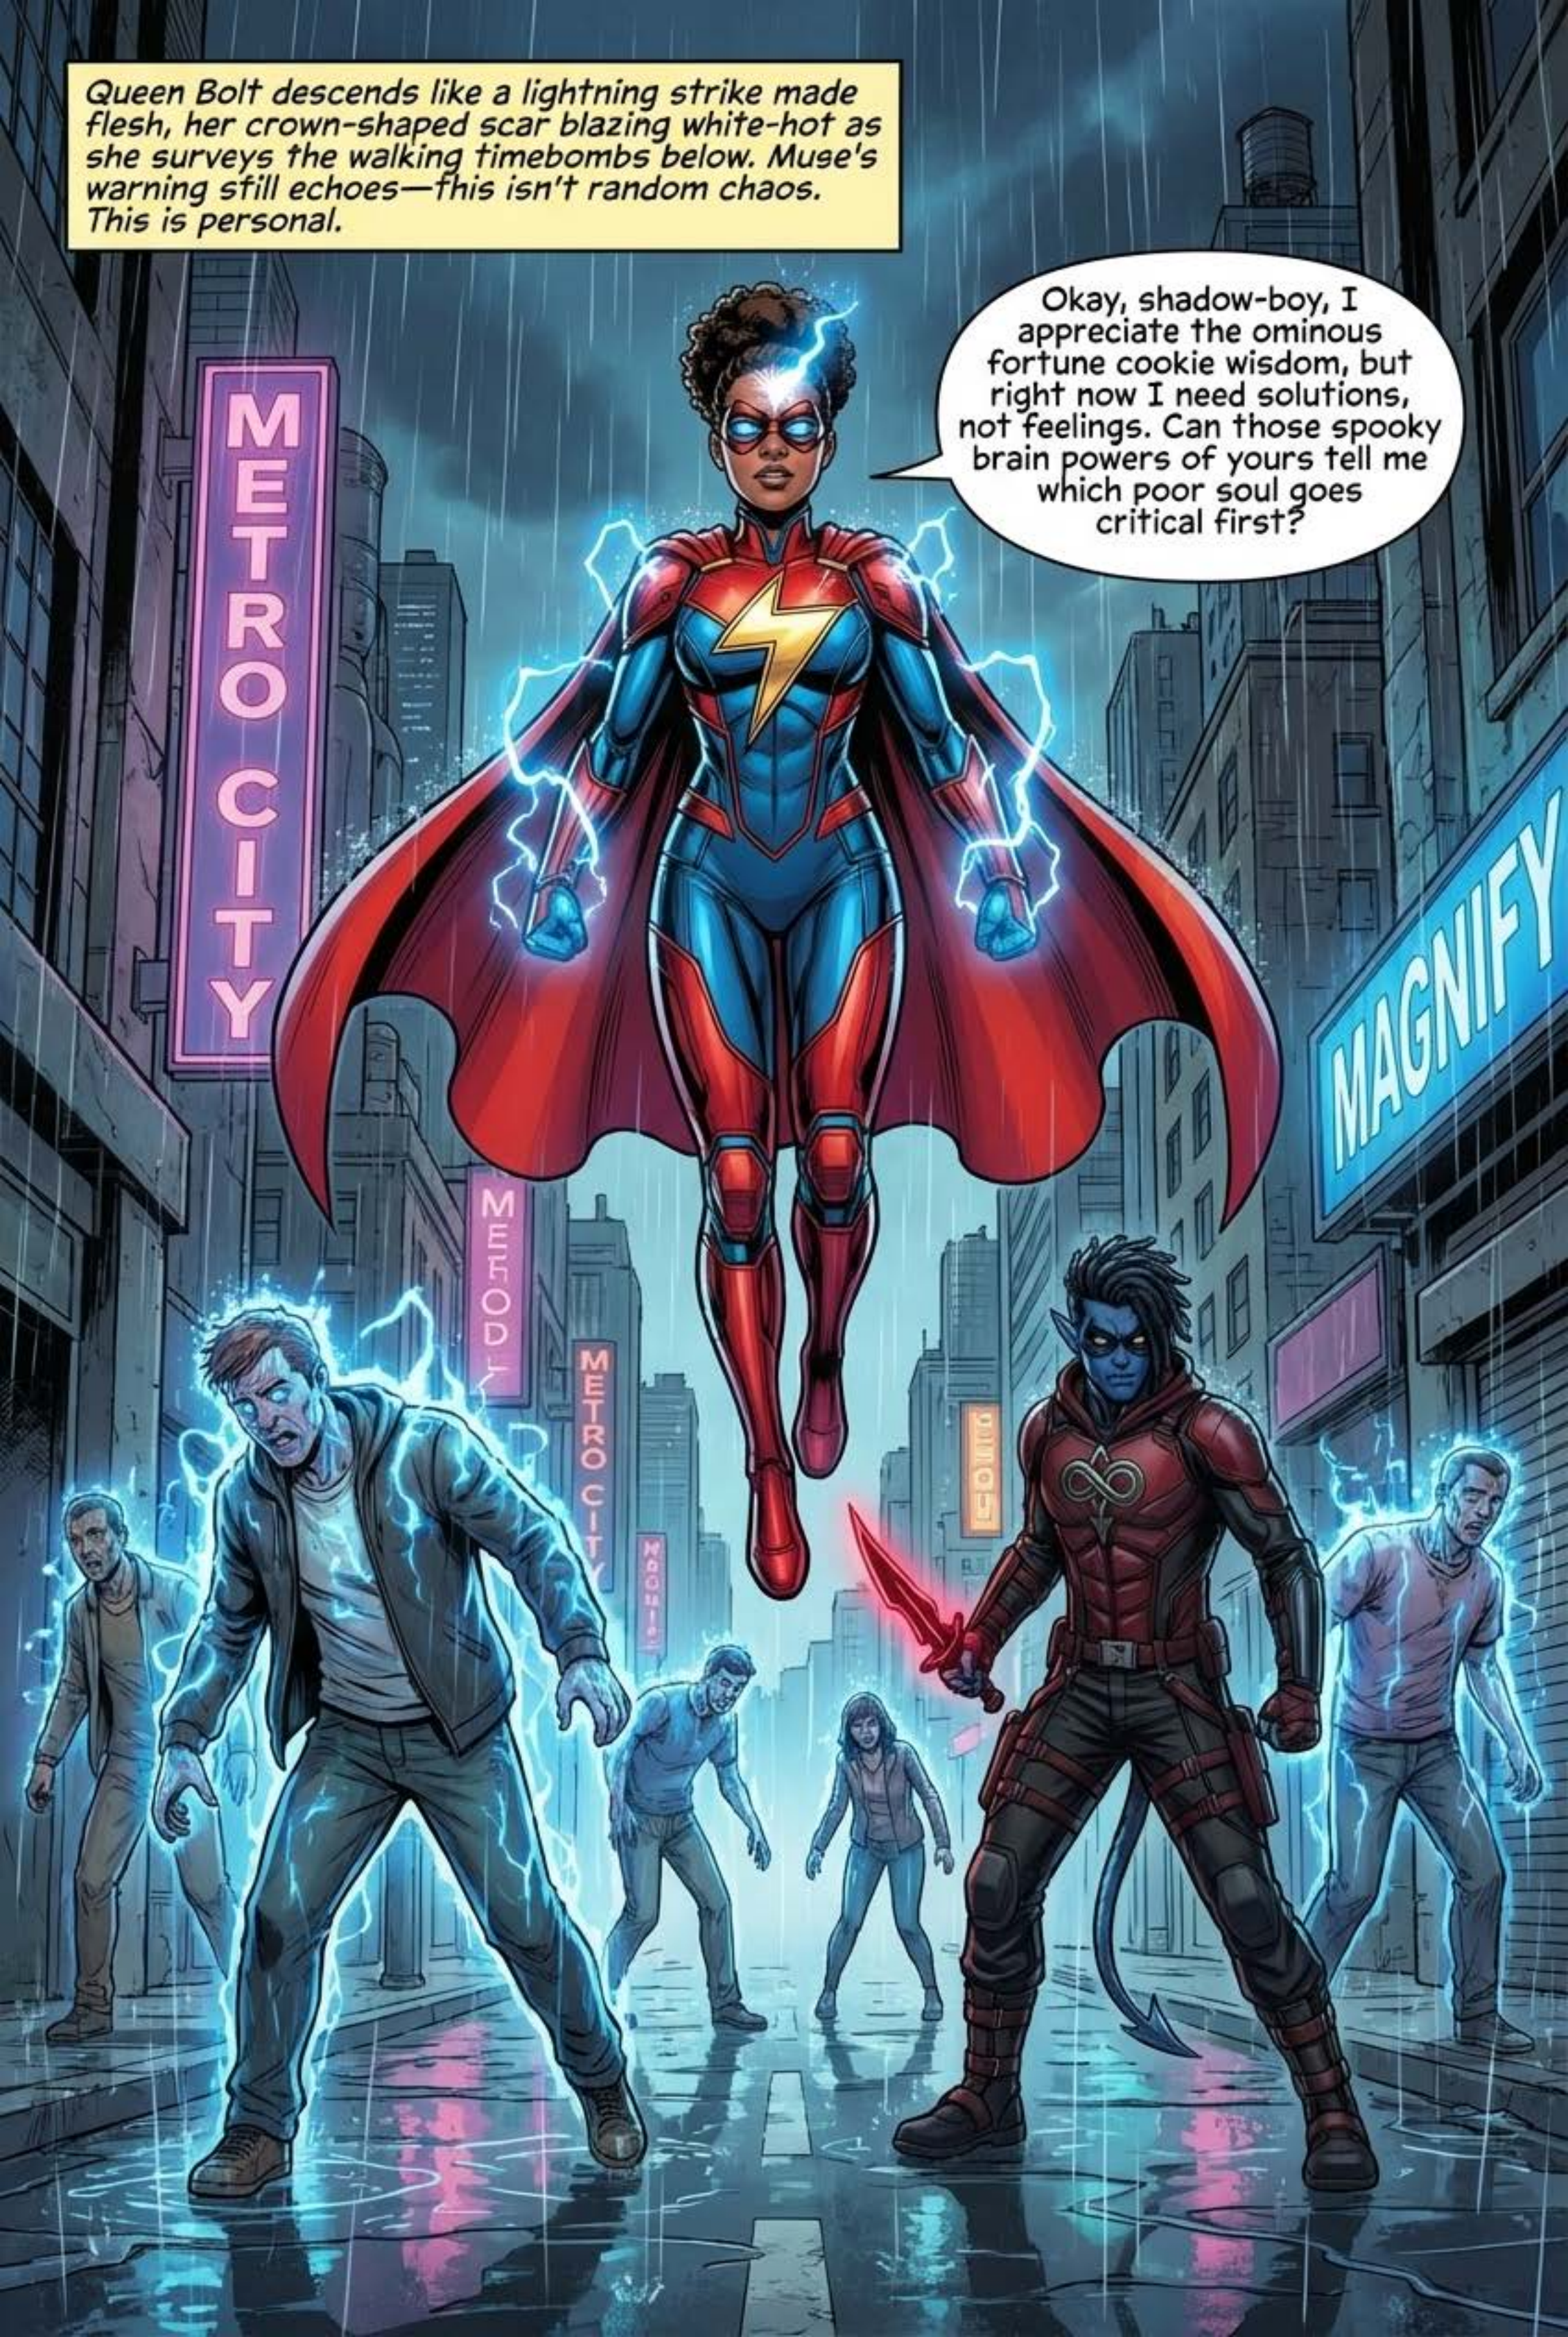
METRO CITY
METRO



Queen Bolt descends like a lightning strike made flesh, her crown-shaped scar blazing white-hot as she surveys the walking timebombs below. Muse's warning still echoes—this isn't random chaos. This is personal.
Okay, shadow-boy, I appreciate the ominous fortune cookie wisdom, but right now I need solutions, not feelings. Can those spooky brain powers of yours tell me which poor soul goes critical first?
METRO CITY
MAGNIFY

The first victim's detonation is a microsecond away—white-hot core already breaching critical mass. Queen Bolt doesn't think. She moves at the speed of lightning itself, her body ionizing into pure electrical energy.
Muse—catch the fallout! I'm going in hot and I won't have hands when I'm done!

The young woman collapses, steam rising from her skin as the stolen energy bleeds away. Muse catches her before she hits the pavement, his white-glowing eyes already tracking the next threat—but something shifts in the pattern.
Zara, stop! The emotional signatures just spiked—whoevers watching us is enjoying this way too much. Theyre not just detonating people. Theyre learning how you think.
CITY